

Second Sense
Beyond vision loss

2022 Annual Report

Angela lost her confidence to travel independently during the pandemic.

“I hadn’t been out alone since November of 2020. I’ve been having anxiety about just leaving the house. I have lost more vision — just seeing light and shadows now.”

So Angela requested some location-specific training. This allows her to practice her skills and strengthen those that need it while learning to travel along the safest route to several new locations — like a local gym and drum lessons.

Sabrina learned how to use the built-in VoiceOver accessibility feature on her iPhone.

Using gestures — one, two or three-finger taps, swipes up, down, across or diagonally are some of these gestures — Sabrina learned to operate her phone without having to see the screen.

She can now quickly answer calls, start and stop speech output and use voice memos.

Christopher finished his mobility training and asked for ideas about ways he could stay physically active. Our instructor suggested two local organizations that offer activities for people with disabilities.

Christopher tried riding a tandem bike and sailing. He really took to sailing and signed up for a series of adaptive sailing lessons on Lake Michigan.
